Keywords :Social Conflict, Comparative Literature, Short Stories.

The research entitled "An Analysis of Conflicts in Three Selected Short Stories of Jack London's", which focuses on the analysis of elements of social conflict and human versus natural conflict, which is contained in the three short stories selected. written by Jack London, namely: South of Slot, Love of Life, and To Build of Fire. and appears as a form of rejection of the previous theory. The research method used is descriptive qualitative. In this method the writer will analyze some of the conflicts contained therein, referring to the marx conflict theory and by using the comparative literary method, and then in this study the writer will analyze the selected data qualitatively. That is, in studying literary works with this theory, it is not limited to discussing the intrinsic elements of literary works but is added with studies of other related categories. Research data collection was carried out in the following steps: reading short stories carefully, identifying data related to social conflict issues, taking inventory of data, classifying data, selecting data, and finally reporting data into attachments. There are several techniques for analyzing data, exposing, explaining, interpreting and finally concluding, the authors analyze all these factors by classifying the conflicts that occur according to the main character. The problem raised in this thesis is to analyze how conflict occurs in the main character. In Jack London's short stories based on each factor, with this analysis we will find out the characteristics of the three short stories written in this thesis specifically, and in other short stories he wrote in general.
